Lying to ourselves is just the start

Alfred and Melinda are a married couple with their fair share of troubles. Despite all they have been through, they remain positive and happy. Whatever life throws at them they can take it and keep the smiles on their faces.

However, when they are invited to a dinner party at the apartment of Eduardo, a long-time artist friend of Alfred's, they encounter his new girlfriend. Eva, forty years Eduardo's junior, has a very different outlook. As the drinks and questions start to flow, stories come out and long buried feelings begin to surface in an evening Alfred and Melinda will never forget.

In this sharp and deep comedy, upcoming playwright Robert Caisley invites the audience to consider the true nature of human emotion and whether we really do have to be happy all the time.
